Global Oneness Film Maker Event

Global Oneness invites you to join them on April 30th at 11am/PST for their Community Storyteller Discussion Series where they will host filmmaker Maris Curran, director of While I Yet Live. This short film tells the story of five African American women who are acclaimed quilters and freedom-fighters. Set in the small rural community of Gee's Bend, Alabama—now known as Boykin—the community of women shares their cultural and family heritage of quilting. Gee's Bend—40 miles south of Selma—is home to 700 inhabitants, most of whom are descendants of slaves who worked for generations in the fields of the local Pettway plantation. The art of quilt making has been practiced and passed down through generations by the women of Gee's Bend since the mid-nineteenth century. While I Yet Live beautifully captures the women's lives in this rural community and their expressions of grief, wisdom, joy, and love.

All are welcome to attend this free event. Watch While I Yet Live in advance, and bring your questions to the conversation! Closed captioning and sign language interpreters will be available.

Stage the Change: Call for Entries

Our friends at Stage the Change has a call for 2020 entries for their fall conference. Deadline is June 26th and the Guidelines are available on their website.

STAGE THE CHANGE

Additionally, there's a new addition to the 2020 Call for Entries: Share your QUARANTINE STORY. How has COVID-19 affected you and those around you? Write, record and submit a 1-2 minute original monologue. All stories welcome- use your sense of humor and compassion! DEADLINE IS APRIL 30, 2020 and entries will be adjudicated by a panel of theater professionals. Top entries will be presented at the 2020 Stage the Change conference and possibly on social media. Go to their website for more information.
